Greek Ancestry's collections. When Greece became an independent state, municipalities started keeping Male Registers (Μητρώα Αρρένων), which list all the males born in a particular area. These records were kept for military purposes. Male registers were created for all areas in Greece, and as new areas became part of the country, they also began keeping such registers. In some cases, male registers were reconstructed retrospectively, based on other records. In general, male registers list: the name of the male individual, his father's name, birth year and place of birth. Later registers may include the individual's mother's name and full date of birth. Want to know more? Check out our relevant webinar Source: General State Archives of Greece Military Lists identify individuals who were eligible for service in the armed forces of Greece. In the nineteenth century, all men were required to serve when 21 years of age. Military lists include the following information: the individual's name, father's name, municipality of origin, as well as the location and type of service. Censuses (1828-1868) The first census to be conducted in the modern Greek state was that of 1828-1829, under Governor Kapodistrias. The type of information included in the census reports varried, depending on the region. The census may include from the individual's name, surname and occupation to his age, information about his family, number of children, wife's name etc. Women were included in the censuses as wives, daughters or widows. This collection relies on material from the Central Office of the General State Archives. Want to know more? Check out our relevant webinar
